OFF THE MENU

ELI'S VINEGAR FACTORY, the market at 431 East 91st Street, is to reopen tomorrow, following a fire on Sunday night that damaged an adjacent space housing its pastry kitchens and rooftop greenhouses. ELI ZABAR, the owner, said he plans to rebuild. In the meantime he will use kitchens in other buildings he owns around New York City to bake his cakes and pastries.

Students at the Charles B. Wang Center for Asian Studies at Stony Brook University on Long Island can now take scholarly inspiration from lunch. JASMINE, an ambitious 350-seat restaurant, opens at the center today with stations for Thai, Chinese, Indian and Japanese food.

Jasmine was created by RAJESH BHARDWAJ, right, and SUSHIL MAHOLTRA, far right, who own the Cafe Spice restaurants in New York and other cities and Feng Shui at Grand Central Terminal. Jasmine is an 8,500-square-foot space designed by BEYER BLINDER BELLE, with graphics by MILTON GLASER. It has views of the center's gardens and pools. You do not need a textbook under your arm to get in. It is open to the public from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m., Sunday through Friday, 5 to 8 p.m. on Saturdays. Prices are $2.95 to $7.95.
